

Vision finally becomes reality

Simone Files spends her day managing a team of people, disbursed across south-east Queensland and overseas, on behalf of a Gold Coast technology company.

And she does it all from her home office in Toowoomba.

Flexible hours and technology such as Skype and MSN Messenger make it possible.

Simone believes if you find something that you love to do, you will never work a day in your life. And she's living the truth of it by determining her own schedule to balance family life with her other commitments.

"Deciding what days and hours I spend in my office fits in perfectly with raising our two boys," said Simone.

Simone has been instrumental in developing software to assist small and medium sized businesses to supervise, analyse, and optimise their staff.

Two years into the project, her vision is now a reality with ThoughtWare ready to launch its i.on my software nationwide.

Childcare centres, private schools and professional practices are some of those businesses who will benefit.

The software is industry specific and not a generalised human resource system giving business owners and managers more time to do what they do best.

"The industries that we have developed the i.on my system for have a large percentage of their operating costs as staff costs," said Simone.

"Maximising staff productivity, by easing the administrative and compliance burden, results in huge savings in costs and time."
